Jimi Hendrix Fuzz Face Sells For $40,625. Ever since Jimi Hendrix first inflamed the rock world with his majestically distorted squalls, guitarists have tried to emulate his sound. And during that same time, effects pedal manufacturers – some of whom gained prominence during Hendrix's rise, providing prototypes to the adventurous guitarist – have...

Hendrix's guitars also had staggered pickup poles; by reversing the order of the strings, Jimi altered the pickups' harmonic structure, contributing further to his unique sound, Fender said. Hendrix favored coiled cables, which are known for their higher capacitance, which takes out some of the highs and warms the tone.

I think that's the Dunlop JH-2, which, if my understanding is correct, Dunlop produced at a time when it had the rights to Hendrix's name, but did not yet have the rights to the Fuzz Face trade dress that it later acquired from Crest Audio. (Dave Fox might be able to provide a firsthand account of the timing, if I've got it wrong.)
